

Children's Day 2018 - Jewellery Making

When I arrived at the Choral Room to prepare for the Jewellery Making Activity, most of the Parent Volunteers (PVs) were already there setting up their tables, reconnecting with old friends and making new ones. Newbies took the opportunity to pick up tips from seasoned volunteers.

There was a palpable sense of excitement at the fun to be had as well as a touch of apprehension - would we be able to cope if there were a deluge of girls? Would there be enough beads for everyone? Would they enjoy the activity? We certainly didn't want any girl to walk away disappointed.

We needn't have worried. The action began from the moment the girls started trickling in, all the way to the end of the last recess period. Every girl got to make her own bracelet and they seemed to love it. It was enjoyable interacting with the girls while helping them with their bracelets, seeing their different personalities: shy, chirpy, forthcoming, etc, and especially seeing their happiness with their self-designed bracelet.

I think that all the PVs felt the same way and if you asked them, I'm sure they would say they enjoyed the day as much as, if not more than, the girls!
